TWELVE MEN CAUGHT IN RAID OF STORE AT POND AND WASHINGTON STREETS; ELEVEN FINED; ONE HELD FOR HEARING

William Misera Held As The Alleged Proprietor of Place—Police Force Their Way Through Door—Eleven Pay Fines and Costs of $14.50 Each

Twelve men were caught in a raid on an alleged gambling den here early this morning when police forced their way into a store at Pond and Washington streets, operated according to the police by William Misera.

The 12 men placed under arrest were taken to police headquarters and two tables and about a dozen chairs were confiscated. Police gained an entrance by breaking through the front door.

Eleven of the 12 men taken into custody were given hearings before Justice of Peace Arthur P. Brady and fined $14.50 each. All paid their fines.

William Misera, the alleged proprietor, was held in $500 bail for a further hearing Monday. He is charged with maintaining and operating a gambling house.

The raid was made at 115 by Officers Ferry, Anthony Nichols, Bartle, and Vanzant.

The inmates of the place were playing poker when the officers arrived, and great confusion was caused as the police forced their way in.

This is the second gambling place to be raided here recently, and following the other raid most of the places closed.

The place raided this morning has been in operation for some time, and the windows were covered so that people passing could not see what was going on inside.

Two automobiles hauled those arrested to police headquarters, and also the tables and chairs which were taken.

In addition to the two tables and the dozen chairs, the police got 16 packages of playing cards, and $12 in money.

At the hearing which was held shortly after the raid, Chief Jones demanded that each defendant produce his registration card. They all had their cards with them.

Immediately upon arriving at police headquarters those caught in the raid were placed in cells until the hearing was held.

The gambling fraternity is in a turmoil over the raid. They were of the opinion that following the raid a few weeks ago the police would soon lose their vigilance and that then they would be able to operate. But with the raid held this morning, the lid has been clamped down tight.

Most of those caught in the raid were young men. All were married and one of the group was 40 years of age. They all gave Bristol addresses.

The police, before staging the raid, had spotted the place. The windows of the store had been blacked out some time ago, but light could be detected through one spot. The police milled about the place and listened for voices, which they soon heard. Then an officer placed his shoulder against the door and crashed in. There was only one exit and those inside had no other way out except the front door where the officers were stationed.

The men were lined up, told that they were under arrest. Some were placed in the police radio car and taken to headquarters, while another car was summoned to take the other prisoners and the equipment.

THE WAR AT A GLANCE

By International News Service

Nazi Germany rocked today under the impact of one of the heaviest British air raids of the war.

While the target of the assault was not immediately revealed by the British Air Ministry, there were hints that the raid might have been on a scale comparable with the 1,000-plane raids on Cologne, Bremen and Essen last summer.

An official announcement described the participating force as very heavy. Residents of towns along England's southeast coast reported hearing endless streams of big four-motored bombers, clearly visible in brilliant moonlight, streaming across the channel.

From the Berlin radio came the claim that 40 British bombers were shot down. On the basis of the five per cent margin of loss accepted as reasonable by British air authorities, this would indicate that a force of at least 800 planes took part.

Berlin said that strong defenses had prevented "concentrated attacks" and reported that bombs had been dropped "sporadically" and chiefly in country districts. At the same time the Nazis claimed that heavy German bombers had blasted "important war objectives" in London with good effect.

The British admitted that enemy planes had carried out retaliatory raids on objectives in East Anglia and southern England and that a few of them had succeeded in penetrating into the Greater London area and the home counties. Only slight damage and a small number of casualties were reported as four of the Nazi planes were shot down.

The R. A. F. attack on targets in southern and northeastern Germany followed swiftly on the heels of heavy American daylight attacks on the Nazi.

At United Nations airfields throughout the world the bomb dolly is an important piece of equipment. Rubber tired, sturdy, they are pulled into place by tractors, or pushed by manpower to load destruction on to the famous American bombers.

LATEST NEWS BULLETINS

British Carry Out Heaviest Raid of the Year; Pound Pilsen

LONDON—A force of more than 600 of Britain's big four-motored bombers carried out the heaviest raid of the year last night on the Nazi-operated munitions plants at Pilsen, Czechoslovakia, and the German cities of Mannheim and Ludwigshafen, the Air Ministry announced today. Fifty-five British planes were lost.

Preliminary reports from returning crew members indicated that the raids, carried out in brilliant moonlight, were highly successful. Last night's attack, though not quite on the scale of the 1,000-plane raids on Cologne, Essen and Bremen last summer, was nevertheless a clear indication of the Allies' intention to give Germany no rest until the invasion of the continent begins.

The loss of 55 bombers represents a loss of nearly 400 crew members. The Berlin radio, after first claiming that 51 British bombers were shot down, later broadcast an announcement saying that at least 76 planes were lost by the Allies. Early last night, British fighter planes attacked enemy shipping off the Brittany coast, while fighter-bombers bombed a power station at Mondreville near Caen. Two planes are missing.

While Allied bombers were blasting Germany, 15 German planes carried out retaliatory attacks on England, dropping bombs on East Anglia and other objectives on the southeast coast. Four were shot down.

The loss of 55 bombers was the highest ever conceded in any single raid on enemy territory. Fifty-two British bombers were lost during the 1,000 plane attack on Bremen last summer.

The Skoda munitions works in Pilsen are Germany's most important war production center. It was the fifth attack of the war on the Nazi-operated plants. If the estimate of more than 2,000 tons of bombs dropped is borne out, it would mean that Germany last night received the heaviest attack in the history of aerial warfare, although the number of planes involved was not as great as those used against Cologne, Bremen and Essen.

ADVICE GIVEN WOMEN FOR VICTORY GARDENS

Walter W. Pitzonka is Speaker at Meeting of The Travel Club

DELEGATES ARE NAMED

Prefacing his talk on victory gardens with the thought that there will be many worthwhile gardens in this vicinity this season, and consequently much goods stored for next winter, Walter W. Pitzonka addressed Travel Club members yesterday afternoon.

Not only did Mr. Pitzonka include information regarding variety of crops to plant, when to plant, and preparation of the soil, but he gave from his wealth of experience his opinion as to the most tasty and productive type of various vegetables.

"The main thing is to have the ground in condition to grow vegetables," he admonished, mentioning that sufficient nitrogen, phosphate and potash are necessary for the soil to be productive. With the government limiting the amount of nitrogen allotted for fertilization it was stated that a special Victory garden fertilizer has been placed at the disposal of the populace. "That is the one fertilizer we will have to plan to work with this year," he would-be women gardeners were told.

The three main points stressed were: Place fertilizer and lime (if needed) on the garden before digging the soil; group together the vegetables which will mature at approximately the same time so that that section can be sown later to other crops; plant types of vegetables that will be most useful next winter.

The amount of fertilizer suggested by the speaker was two to five pounds per hundred square feet, he advising that it be broadcast over the plot before the soil is dug.

Eager gardeners made note as varieties of vegetables were listed by Mr. Pitzonka under the groups of green, leafy, and yellow types, to provide necessary vitamins, etc.

Police Warn Public Against Unknown Solicitors

A warning is given by Chief of Police, Linford J. Jones, today that two men recently canvassed in Lower Southampton for the sale and repair of vacuum cleaners.

At one place one of the men took a cleaner to have it repaired and gave the name of his firm. The firm could not be found and is believed to be fictitious. The cleaner has not as yet been returned.

In another instance one of the men sold a vacuum cleaner for $30 but the cleaner sold was not the one which had been taken for repairs.

One man is described as being between 35 and 40 years old, weight 165 pounds, stocky build. He wore a dark suit and hat.

The other man is said to be about 50 years of age, weight 145 to 150 pounds, medium build, dark complexion. He also wore a dark suit and hat.

CHIEF JONES WARNS AGAINST FALSE CHECKS

Co-operating With U. S. Secret Service to Protect Merchants and Public

OUTLINES SOME RULES

Chief of Police Linford J. Jones has been requested by the U. S. Secret Service to call to the attention of local business men that millions of allowance and allotment checks are being issued monthly to wives and families of men in the armed forces, and that now more than ever the merchant must protect himself against the check thief and forger.

Chief Jones pointed out how the observance of a few simple instructions by the business man could save him from financial loss.

"1—You are the Loser if you cash a check bearing a forged endorsement.
"2—Demand Proper Identification.
"3—Have checks endorsed in your presence.
"4—Ask yourself this question, 'If this check is returned, can I find the person who gave it to me?' In other words, Know Your Endorsers."

The payees of these checks can do their bit, too, in this campaign against the check thief and forger. They should observe the following instructions:
"1—Be sure your name is plainly visible on the mailbox.
"2—At the time of delivery of your check, arrange, if possible, for your mail carrier to notify you by some signal.
"3—If you cash your check at the same place each month you will have less difficulty in identifying yourself.
"4—Do not endorse your check until you are in the presence of the person who cashes it for you."

"The United States Secret Service," said Chief Jones, "has investigative jurisdiction over forged government checks, and has found that educating the public in the proper methods of handling checks pays dividends in fewer forgeries. When checks are stolen and forged, those who are entitled to them may suffer many hardships. While the merchant accepting the check suffers the financial loss, the payee may be required to wait several months before receiving a duplicate check."

Courier Classified Ads bring results and are economical.

A committee consisting of Robert B. Downing, chairman; William Mack, Harry A. Chapin, Robert Clark, William Devore and the Rev. Arthur F. ## East Bristol Township Defense Council Meets

A meeting of the East Bristol Township Council of Defense was held Wednesday evening in the Edgely School building, at eight o'clock. The meeting was presided over by the President, Elwood Britton, eight members of the council being present. The meeting adjourned when the air raid alarm was sounded and resumed at the all-clear signal. Reports were received from the messengers, the report being given by Leon Hutton. Edgar Spencer reported that the coats ordered had been shipped and were expected in a few days. Mrs. William O'Dea reported concerning the casualty stations.

The members of the Council visited the Union Church before the meeting to inspect the equipment of the First-Aid room. Mrs. O'Dea, in charge of casualty stations in East Bristol Township, explained the equipment. The council has purchased a number of first-aid kits and a kit has been placed in each zone, there being seven zones. Large first-aid kits had been placed in the First-Aid stations, with the other medical supplies, and each station has for its use the following supplies: blankets, sheets, triangle bandages, muslin bandages, different widths of sterile bandages and gauze, sterile cotton, ammonia inhalants, peric acid pads, burn ointment, bicarbonate soda, absorbent cellulose, ice caps, hot water bottles, cots, stretchers, large and small splints, rubbing alcohol, disinfectant, basins, buckets, radiocut adhesive tape.

These supplies, it is felt, will aid greatly if any emergency should arise. Mrs. O'Dea reported the stations are located at the following places: Residence of Sidney Longbottom, Landreth Manor; Methodist Church, Edgely; Union Church, Edgely; at Headley Manor the station has been temporarily held up due to illness of the chairman, but it hoped to have this unit established in a very short time.

The public is invited to visit the Station at the Edgely Church tomorrow, between two and four o'clock, so that it can be seen just what is being done for the community, and an invitation is extended to any woman or man who is interested to join with these units. If you are interested, call Mrs. William O'Dea, Bristol 3052.

Elwood Britton reported that helmets and stirrup pumps are to be given to the different units of civilian defense. John L. Kilcoyne, Esq., has been appointed a new member of the council as personnel manager of East Bristol Township. Miss Eleanor Faber has accepted, along with her other duties of the council, to be chairman of property committee. The next meeting will be held Wednesday evening.

FEW EASTER TRIMMINGS

The Government has decided that Easter presents, like Christmas presents, must be curtailed this year in the interest of the fast-developing spartan economy.

Chocolate rabbits and live baby chicks are both frowned upon. It takes no expert to figure out that the chocolate used to coat candy bunnies and Easter eggs is more often than not consigned to the waste basket. Chocolate is scarce this year and important, in a way, to the war effort.

Baby chicks are equally important to the war effort. Few of the thousands sold as playthings for children at Easter ever survive the baby stage. Certainly they should not be sacrificed this year.

On top of this, the government asks that parents prevent their children from coloring hard-boiled eggs in the traditional manner. Most parents will co-operate with this request with a sigh of relief. Dyeing eggs is a sloppy business at best. And there is something about the thought of eating a decorated egg that goes against the grain regardless of how pure the vegetable dye that has been used in the pursuit of art and pleasure. But this last curtailment of Easter fun will weigh heavily on members of the younger generation who enjoy spreading bright colors on eggs, clothes, kitchen utensils and furniture.

Somehow Easter will pass pleasantly for the children of America sans chocolate rabbits, colored eggs or baby chicks. Ingenious parents, already accustomed to substitutes of one kind or another, will find adequate improvisations for these traditional Easter standbys.

DOGS, GOOD AND MISLED

Dogs make headlines. Some are honored, others are accused of having done wrong. But the departure of three from the right path is correctly attributed to bad training and improper environment.

Two daschunds receive an official apology, third hand, from Secretary Morgenthau of the Treasury. A six-year-old daschund fancier in San Francisco had caught sight of a war bond advertisement which caricatured a daschund with Hitler's face, so the lad wrote to the secretary expressing his disgust with this insult to his favorite breed. A Morgenthau aide replied, asking the lad to "tell your daschunds that there was no intention to insult them or the other members of their breed."

A dog, part bull and part terrier, named Sinbad the Sailor, or Stinky, was honored for his work in keeping up the spirit of the crew of a Coast Guard cutter, the Campbell, as it battled German submarines in the North Atlantic for twelve hours last February, depth-bombing five subs and sinking one by ramming it. Commander Hirschfeld, skipper of the Campbell, and the crew believe that so long as Sinbad is aboard nothing can happen to the cutter "and in an apparent resolve to keep the ship safe, Sinbad went below decks and slept in a bunk during the entire battle with the submarines."

Three dogs, a police dog and two of dubious ancestry, were arrested in New York City for having assisted two boys of ten and eleven years in committing burglaries. The dogs acted as sentries and defenders while the lads committed the crimes. The dogs had been stolen in the boys' first burglary. But the dogs should be held blameless, because as the poet, Alexander Pope, might have said: "Tis education forms the canine mind."

Editor of the Courier:
Just a few lines to let you know that I am receiving the Bristol Courier. My mother sends it to me every week. It gets to me a little late but that can't be helped. I sure enjoy sitting down and reading it over and over.

Sure is good to be able to read about someone you know, as well as your buddies; and to find out how they are doing and where they are. It really is kind of hard to explain how happy it makes me. I know the rest of the fellows who are receiving the paper, wherever they may be, feel this way, to be able to know what is going on back home while we are all away.

It has been some time now since I last saw good old Bristol and my folks and friends. So you can see how I feel about receiving the paper. Sure has kept me in good spirits and has given me many happy hours of reading pleasure.

Sorry, I can't say anything about as to what I am doing or where I am, as

CHAPTER TWENTY-THREE

We found the Rawsons debarking from their canoe and unloading their paraphernalia. Rawson, beet-red from the sun on the water in spite of his topee, triumphantly held up a jar. In it was the smallest crab I have ever beheld.

"Not much good for eating," Komako observed disparagingly.

"Is that all a crab means to you?" Mrs. Rawson reproved him, then smiled forgivingly. "But there, I shouldn't expect anything else. Mr. Hoyt, you look rather dispirited. How about both of you coming to our house after dinner?"

"Yes," Rawson seconded her, "we could have a drop of Scotch and some anagnathus."

"Oh, Komako wouldn't care for anagnathus," his wife said quickly. "But there are always characters—they're more fun, anyway. You know, Komako? We act out syllables of words, and the rest of you guess the word."

"Maybe I'm not too good at guessing," Komako said doubtfully.

"Nonsense! That's your profession!" Rawson laughed at his own joke. "Given and I rather enjoy putting on an act. How about it?"

"Don't expect us tonight," I said with real regret, for their invitation had warmed my spirit. "The big seuth here is hot on the trail of the murderer."

"Really?" Mrs. Rawson looked at Komako respectfully. "Well, we shouldn't want to interfere with that!"

"Call on me if you need help," Rawson offered cordially, and stopped to gather up his traps.

Yet he and his wife slept through the amazing events which transpired that night—at least, what is what they claimed afterwards.

With nightfall a dreary persistent rain began to discommode us and Komako and I retired to the cabin of my boat. There we awaited word from Henry, a period of increasing suspense which did not keep Komako from enjoying a hearty dinner.

At last a canoe bumped the side of the sampan, and Komako was up and out to the deck with the agility of a huge mountain cat. When he raced back down the companionway, the dripping Hawaiian youth followed close behind. Henry was obviously tired and a little abused. He had had a hard trip and he wanted us to know it.

"I found Mrs. Delmar at the plantation," he told us, "so I didn't go to Sam Ota. She telephoned Wong about the body and wanted to come home quick because it was going to rain. So I come back with them. No time to rest or anything."

"Good!" Komako slapped him on the shoulder. "She home now?"

"Yes—and pretty mad. She fell in mud and skinned her knee. Wet, too. Can I go home and eat?"

"Sure, sure. Must eat," Komako agreed. "Get good sleep, too."

Komako and I donned our oilskins and rowed ashore in splashing sheets of rain. Lights from the cottages winked through the driving downpour as we made our way through the palm grove where the tops were thrashing noisily in the wind.

An oil lamp burned in Mrs. Delmar's living room and we stopped outside the lanai. "Mrs. Delmar!" Komako called loudly.

Her bedroom door opened and she came hesitantly toward us, clutching a dressing gown around her, peering crossly into the darkness where we stood. Komako stepped into the lanai and as the light fell on him she said wearily:

"Oh, it's you! What now? Can't you let me alone after such a day as I've had?"

"We got to talk to you right away," Komako said urgently. "My goodness! Well, give me time to finish kangading my knee and get dressed—I've been soaked to the skin. Come back in a few minutes." And she went back into her bedroom.

Komako was about to sit down on the lanai but I said, "Let's see if you've aroused the others by your shout. They'll be swarming in here sure as fate if you did, and prevent her talking."

He agreed and we went out into the rain again. In the Latham house across the way the lights were burning, but no one was in sight. We started up the path then, glancing into Turva's house as we passed. Mary was there, talking eagerly to

He agreed and we went out into the rain again. In the Latham house across the way the lights were burning, but no one was in sight. We started up the path then, glancing into Turva's house as we passed. Mary was there, talking eagerly to pulling a rubber cap over her dark hair. At the West's we saw Josephine dragging chairs and cushions off the leaky lanai, but Thornton was not visible. In the three cottages beyond—the Rawsons', Herb's and Bidd's—no lights shone, and we concluded that they had gone to bed. At any rate, it seemed that we were to have a chance at Mrs. Delmar without interruption.

We retraced our steps, glad now of the rain for it was successfully covering our presence. Josephine, putting a big pan under the leak on her lanai, did not glance up as we sneaked past a few feet away on the path. Turva had a big Turkish towel in her hand as we passed her house, and disappeared into her shower room waving it at Mary as if asking her to defer the story until she had had her bath. So far, so good, though now the doctor and his mother—she in curl papers and negligee—were in their living room, apparently selecting something to read from the bookcase. Our footsteps made no sound above the storm, however, and they could not see us in the darkness. I only hoped they would not see us enter Mrs. Delmar's lighted house across the way.

Suddenly Komako, who had stopped on the path behind me, reached out and grasped my shoulder, pulling me back to stand beside him. From there we could look down the side of the Latham cottage to a lighted bedroom at the right of the living room. Elaine was standing there—a soft pink dressing gown over her nightdress—almost facing the window, staring at something out of our sight within the room. There was terror on her face, and it was that look which drew us nearer to her, when we should have gone across to Mrs. Delmar's house.

We stole cautiously toward the window until we had a clearer view of her, though we still could not see what she was staring at. Her hands came up and she began combing her fair hair up to the top of her head, working in feverish jerks, fastening it there with hairpins in a chignon of curls. Then she leaned forward and stared again, and it dawned on me that she was looking into a mirror. She looked down as if consulting something, then pulled the hair into a looser mass. Obviously, she was trying a new coiffure, following some picture or description, for she lifted a sheet of paper into view for an instant, then dropped it as she gazed again at her reflection. The arresting thing was the expression on her face, fear and horror such as I have seldom seen.

Suddenly she flashed about, apparently having heard about, or Mrs. Latham call out to her, for she answered nervously, "Yes, yes, I'm here!" and at once moved toward the door—not into the living room where the others were, but to a back door.

Komako crept forward, watching her until she had opened the door, then thrust himself half into the room through the window. I knew he was determined to get that picture, and watched not only to see that Elaine did not turn as she went through the door, but also to see that she did not turn back to see if we were still there. We made off as quickly as we could, without stumbling, so caught her at the back door.

By the time we reached B. Elaine was nowhere to be seen. Either she had remained inside because of the rain, or had gone somewhere into the dripping darkness, dead in that pink dressing gown. We hesitated there and Komako whispered:

"Maybe we ought to tell doctor she is acting queer."

"We don't know but that she's still inside," I whispered back. "And we certainly don't want the doctor to know we're here. Come on—Mrs. Delmar ought to be ready by now."

We went back, around the side of the house to the path, glancing up and down to see if there was any trace of Elaine moving through the downpour. There was none, and we started toward Mrs. Delmar's, but had taken only a step or two when Komako clutched my arm and I, too, saw a shadow, bent over, crossing through the light cast from Turva's window between her house and Mrs. Delmar's. Komako was off after it on the instant. I followed but was tripped by a vine, and when I recovered myself, Elaine was running out of Mrs. Delmar's lanai and plunging off into the darkness—not back to the Latham house.

I resolved to leave her alone for the moment, and go after Komako. I was already exasperated at the number of things which kept bobbing up to delay the urgent interview with Mrs. Delmar, and our chance of getting it without arousing anybody seemed to be now or never. Sprinting down between her house and Turva's in the direction Komako had taken, I heard Turva's shower pounding and felt fall in warm water running out from it in a trough. I was glad of the noise the shower made, for as I picked myself up I heard Mary call out:

"You hear somebody outside, Miss Turva? Oh, hurry up bath—I am scared!"

I knew he was determined to get that picture, and watched not only to see that Elaine did not turn as she went through the door, but also to see that she did not turn back to see if we were still there. We made off as quickly as we could, without stumbling, so caught her at the back door.

By the time we reached B. Elaine was nowhere to be seen. Either she had remained inside because of the rain, or had gone somewhere into the dripping darkness, dead in that pink dressing gown. We hesitated there and Komako whispered:

Pastor, Bristol Presbyterian Church

We thank thee, O God, our Father, for Jesus Christ our Lord, who so loved us that He left His glory as One of the Godhead and took upon Himself the form of man, that in His living and dying we might find life. Guide our footsteps toward thy house, that on the morrow we might join the multitudes who sang praises to His Name as He entered the ancient city. May we also crown Him King of Kings and Lord of Lords, and make Him Master of our hearts. In His blessed Name we pray. Amen.

NEW LINING GIVES AN OLD COAT MUCH LONGER LIFE LEASE

By Mrs. Katharine C. Moon
Home Economics Representative
A new lining will make that lightweight coat good for another season or two, for in wartime every garment must give its maximum service.

Refining a coat is not difficult. The job has only six major steps.

First, cut a new lining exactly by the old one. Rip out the old lining and notice how it was put in. Take one front section of the old lining, half the back section, and one sleeve lining as patterns. Press these parts, cut the new lining accurately, allowing for generous seams and edges and for the pleat down the center of the back.

Second, baste and press the center back pleat and catch-stitch the pleat down for about 2 inches at the neck, waist, and hem. Make shoulder darts in the front sections as they were in the old lining.

Third step, baste the underarm and sleeve seams of the lining but leave the shoulder seams open. Turn the coat wrong side out, hang on a hanger, pin lining on the coat, if necessary, remove lining and stitch and press side seams.

The fourth step is to slip the lining over the coat again, pin and tack it along the side seams, pin the front sections to the coat and along the shoulder seams. Then blind-stitch the lining to the coat down the front almost to the hem. Sew the front sections to the shoulder seams and bring the back section up to the neck. Pin and sew it at the neck and across the shoulders. Tack the lining around the armholes and press the armhole seams toward the sleeves.

Fifth, fit the sleeve lining in place, basting and easing in any fullness to fit the armhole, and blind-stitch the sleeve lining over the front and back lining. Hem the sleeve lining to the coat at the wrists, about a half inch above the edge.

The sixth and last step, hem the bottom of the lining. Put the coat on a hanger, pin up the lining so that it is three-fourths of an inch shorter than the coat, and hem the lining separate from the coat. Tack the lining at the side seams with French tacks. Press the coat on the lining side and the job is done.

BEAUTY PARADE

By Milo Anderson
(Famous Hollywood Stylist Writing For International News Service)
HOLLYWOOD, Calif.—(INS)—Evidence of new clothes ideas is constantly being witnessed in Hollywood—whether it's at the Hollywood Canteen on some busy worker or at the Mocambo or Ciro's on someone gaining a brief respite from war or professional activities.

Ida Lupino, star of Warner Bros. "The Hard Way," served the men at the Hollywood Canteen the other evening with food, bon mots and a bright picture in her tomato-red gabardine dress. Sleek and fitted, it is styled with short sleeves, a sharp square neckline, and a skirt that features a triangular full-pleated apron which may be detached for practical canteen duties behind the counter, and donned again for style flattery when dancing with the boys.

Irene Dunne, lunching recently at the Hollywood Brown Derby, wore a smartly tailored suit of white, and black bengaline. The jacket, in white, was a briefly cut and topped a slim, black skirt which was edged at the hemline with a white bengaline cuff trimmed all around with tiny military-looking buttons. Miss Dunne wore her diamond and ivory chessman clip on the side of a matching black bengaline bag, and a black milan pagoda hat.

Eleanor Parker, young Warner Bros. actress to be seen next in "Mission to Moscow," looked prettily feminine the other evening when she dined at The Players with a group of naval officers. Eleanor's short black crepe dinner dress was accented at the deep square neckline with a velvet choker pinned with three tiny diamond floral clips. Black velvet accessories and a charming hat of black velvet, maline and huge cabbage roses completed the ensemble.

"The SEA WOLF"

ON THE SCREENS

RITZ THEATRE

An assortment of Hollywood's sturdiest, most rugged males comprises the "Flying Tigers," scheduled to go into the Ritz Theatre for a two-day run starting Sunday.

John Wayne, tall and commanding, hails from Iowa, but spent his childhood on a ranch near Lancaster, Cal. After starring for over ten years in westerns, he finally got Hollywood to wake up to his talents as a dramatic actor of Grade A calibre.

GRAND THEATRE

Van Heflin, Lionel Barrymore and Ruth Hussey, a trio of top-flight stars, are brought together in "Tennessee Johnson," seen Sunday at the Grand Theatre. The result is screen entertainment of the highest calibre.

The story is based on the life of Andrew Johnson, who became President of the United States following the death of its wartime leader, Abraham Lincoln. It details Johnson's early struggles from the time he arrived in the Tennessee hills, an illiterate, runaway tailor's apprentice, his meeting with and marriage to Eliza McArde, school teacher; her successful efforts to educate him, and his career which led him to Washington and to the President's chair.

BRISTOL THEATRE

More laughs are promised patrons of the Bristol Theatre when they see "Henry Aldrich, Editor," Sunday and Monday, than they've gotten from any previous Aldrich Family funfilm. This newest production in the series shows Henry as the editor of his school paper.

The cast includes Jimmy Lydon as Henry, Charles Smith, Rita Quigley, John Littel, Olive Blakeney, Vaughan Glaser, Maude Eburne.

WHITE SOX GOT A BODY BLOW IN LOSS OF 2 MAIN PLAYERS

Jimmie Dykes Says Club Is No Worse Off Than Last Year

OTHER CLUBS HIT, TOO Outfield To Be Constructed Around the Veteran Wally Moses

(Editor's Note—Herewith is another article of a series on prospects of the various major league clubs in the forthcoming pennant races. Today, the Chicago White Sox.)

By Wayne K. Otto (I. N. S. Special Correspondent)

FRENCH LICK, Ind., Apr. 17.—(INS)—Approximately 30 players, who once wore the uniform of the White Sox, or else were the property of the club are now engaged in either military duty or defense work, but the loss of only two of them can be considered as body blows to the chances of Jimmie Dykes' team in 1943.

Those two men were the great Ted Lyons, who could always bag a dozen victories even with a mediocre club back of him, and the team's leading hitter of 1942, Tuffy Wright.

Therefore it is no surprise to hear the colorful Sox manager, Jimmie Dykes, sum up the team's chances in this manner:

"We're no worse off than we were last year, if you consider what has happened to the other clubs. Sure, we lost players to the necessities of war, but none of them aside from Wright was able to drive in very many runs. As to our pitching, we'll have as much as the other clubs."

Dykes' 1943 outfield will be constructed around the agile figure of veteran Wally Moses, Julius ("Moose") Solters who has had some great seasons with the Sox, Browns and Indians, was salvaged from retirement to ease the situation. Whether he can come close to approximating the form he once possessed, is something to be ascertained later on.

Thurman Tucker, who set the Texas League ablaze, is slated to start the season in centerfield as well as being the club's leadoff man. Tucker is rangy, a left-hand hitter of arts and has plenty of speed.

Guy Cutright, a minor league veteran, Ralph Hodgins and Frank Kalin are the other flycatchers. Cutright, who was impressive at St. Paul, and Hodgins, who batted .329 for San Francisco, seem to be certain to stick. Kalin came up with plenty of press notices from Hollywood in addition to an average of .304.

The Sox have suffered only two infield losses, Dario Lodigiani and third baseman Bob Kennedy. They still have the veterans Luke Appling at short, Joe Kuhel at first and Don Kolloway at second. Dick Culler, who played a fine defensive game at shortstop for St. Paul is the understudy to Appling this season and it is just possible that Dykes will move his veteran shortstop to third if Jimmy Grant does not make good. Jimmy ("Skeeter") Webb is the other replacement. Kuhel had a bad season at bat in 1942 but is expected to do better next summer. The same applies to Appling, whose stickwork fell off to a mere .262 in 1943.

There is a possibility that Kolloway, a rapidly improving second baseman with a great natural ability, may be re-classified in the draft. However, Dykes refuses to indulge in premature concern over a situation which cannot be altered.

Mike Tresh and Tom Turner, both veterans, will handle the greater portion of the catching but one of the youngsters, Vincent Castino or Tom Jordan, will be retained for the third-string berth.

Thornton ("Goon") Lee, the big lefthander, whose arm was ailing most of 1942, seems to be the key to the team's pitching success. If the Goon can make a comeback—and there are evidences this Spring that he can—a lot of the lack occasioned by Lyons' call to the Marines should be taken up.

Most of Dykes' pitchers are veterans. His other lefthanders who should win are Jake Wade and roly-poly Edgar Smith. Joe Haynes, who did a fine relief job last season, seems to be destined for a starting assignment this year. Johnny Humphries, one of the best of the Sox hurlers in 1942, is the other man on whom Dykes is greatly dependent. Bill Dietrich, Orval Grove, Bill Swift, the other Pittsburgh and Brooklyn veteran, Lee Ross, and rookies Floyd Speer, Gordon Maltzberger, and southpaw Don Hanki complete the staff, which taken all in all, is not so bad as it may sound.

submarine bases at Lorient and Brest, as well as harbor facilities at those ports.

By midnight last night, it was revealed, the R. A. F. had completed 100 hours of continuous activity over Germany or German-occupied territory on continental Europe, during which enemy railways and industrial areas were severely hit.

In Tunisia, the British First Army consolidated its hold on strategic heights near Medjez-el-Bab after smashing a series of furious German counter-attacks. As the First Army pressed its drive against the big Axis bases at Tunis and Bizerte, patrols of the British Eighth Army probed Axis defenses in the Enfidaville region 50 miles below Tunis.

Meanwhile British and American Bombers and fighter planes constantly harassed enemy airfields, transport columns and supply lines in Tunisia. Sicily and the Mediterranean, despite inclement weather.

Axis radio stations nervously reported that Gen. Sir Bernard Law Montgomery had apparently finished regrouping his Eighth Army forces before the Axis defenses lines at Enfidaville and was ready to launch another full-scale assault.

The Moscow radio declared that the Germans already were evacuating troops from the capital city of Tunis, but at a news conference yesterday Admiral Sir Andrew Browne Cunningham, commander-in-chief of Allied naval forces in the Mediterranean, declared he had seen no signs of such an evacuation.

In the southwest Pacific, a Japanese convoy which attempted to reinforce the enemy base at Wewak, New Guinea, limped northward today considerably reduced in size. Gen. Douglas MacArthur's communique revealed that a fourth enemy ship had been probably sunk out of the original force of nine. Allied bombers also continued their daily attacks on enemy bases on the islands north of Australia.

In Russia, there was little change, with Soviets repelling Nazi attacks in the middle Donets region below Kharkov and holding firm elsewhere.

Streamline Gardens Ban Back Breaking Work

Garden Rows Must Be Straight and Parallel for Efficient Production.

Victory Gardeners who want good crops with the least work will plant their vegetables in straight rows, which do not grow tall can be spaced far enough apart to enable cultivation to be done with a hoe or wheel hoe, with the gardener standing up.

This is the modern, American way. Gardeners who learned their technique in Europe often broadcast vegetable seeds in beds, with paths between the beds. Then they stand in the paths, bend over, and pull up weeds by hand. This is the practice which started the idea that gardening is backbreaking work.

The bed method has been obsolete for many years in America. In a well planned garden the work can be as light as housework, with no job to be done which is any greater strain than sweeping.

Such a garden requires careful planning to make the rows straight and parallel, so that a cultivator can be quickly run down the aisle between the rows, destroying all weeds and breaking the crust of the soil in a few minutes.

How far apart should the rows be? There is no magic formula for this. Root vegetables, and others which do not grow tall can be spaced as closely as 10 inches in fertile soil; but at this distance it is difficult to cultivate them with tools, without disturbing the roots of your crop.

The best method is to figure out what kind of cultivator you are going to use, and how much room between rows is necessary so that you can use it, without getting too close to the vegetables. Make this distance the minimum between your rows, and allow more than this space for crops which grow tall, for those which sprawl or make vines, and for those which make large bushes.

Eighteen inches is a good minimum for most gardens; even a small wheel hoe can be used between rows that close. And when your decision is made, then measure the rows accurately. Don't guess at the distance. Make the rows straight and parallel, and your garden will begin to present a professional appearance from the time the first crops begin to sprout.

Advice Given Women For Victory Gardens

Another piece of advice was "Try for succession of planting in order to provide vegetables throughout the summer and early fall." Mr. Pitkonka mentioned that beets, snap beans and cabbage could be planted early and plantings repeated every two or three weeks to assure steady crops; with carrots planted about once monthly. "Lima beans should not be planted before May 15th, and it is better really to wait until the 30th of May. Cauliflower should be planted in the spring as it takes all season for this to grow. Peas can be planted in the fall, but they will not be as successful as spring peas."

The program of the afternoon was in charge of Mrs. Pitkonka, a member of the garden committee of the club. She called upon Mrs. David Sheerer, Jr., the musician of the afternoon. Mrs. Sheerer played as piano solo "Rustling in Spring" and "Country Gardens."

Another feature of the day was comment given by Mrs. Russell W. DeLong on floral arrangements which she had placed in the club room. The beautiful displays attracted much attention. Among them were Blue Boy pansies and myrtle on a blue platter; pink carnations arranged low in a turquoise bowl with lavender stock as a background; long sprays of forsythia with lower arrangement of snapdragons and pansies, against a silver tray and highly-polished table leaf; Japanese cherry blossoms in a long, low green pottery container. Mrs. DeLong concluded her comments by reading an original poem.

Very truly yours,

General Chairman,
Red Cross War Fund Drive.
